She said the current assessment on wool is ten cents per pound and broke down the four categories it is used for. She said due to low prices for wool over the past few years, many sellers are holding their wool until they can get a better price per pound. She said there are 230,000 head in the state making Idaho among the top ten states for sheep and lambs. She detailed several programs sponsored by IWGA to educate and inform the public of the importance of the Idaho sheep industry.

Brad Griff, Executive Director for Idaho Sugar Beet Association, explained sugar beets are a root crop grown below the soil, usually weighing up to 3-5 pounds and are harvested in the late fall to increase sugar content. Sugar beets are grown in 11 states, primarily in the northern states where warm days and cooler nights produce the best crop. Idaho is the largest producer of sugar beets in the nation and accounts for 18% of sugar beet production in the country. Mr. Griff spoke to the importance of using the best farming practices to achieve sustainability by decreasing the use of pesticide, reducing fuel usage, improving soil health and increasing efficiency.

Jessica Anderson, Public Affairs Manager for Amalgamated Sugar, said they are the second largest beet sugar company in the nation producing 10% of the nation's real sugar. They were founded in 1897 and now have three processing factories, employing 1,700 employees. She spoke concerning the three legislative priorities which are transportation, recruiting talent for employment opportunities in the industry and continuing agricultural research. She explained sugar is more than just sweetness. Along with fat and protein, sugar provides the body with energy and should be included in moderation and portion control in a healthy diet.
